SELLING AND NEGOTIATION · 6 MIN READ

Best sales practice on the shop floor

Good selling at D Byk is not pressure. It is finding out what the rider needs, showing the right two or three bikes, and making the next step easy.

1. Greet and give space

Greet every customer within a few seconds of them walking in. Then let them look for a moment before you start. On the phone, give the store name and your own name.

2. Ask before you tell

Do not start with a bike. Start with the rider.

- What riding do you want to do, and how often?
- What distances, and on what roads?
- What are you riding now, and what do you not like about it?
- What is your height?
- What budget do you have in mind, including helmet and accessories?

Listen to the whole answer. The customer should be talking more than you in the first few minutes.

3. Show three, not ten

Offer a good, better and best option that fit what they said. For each, give one reason in the customer's own words: "You said your back hurts on long rides. This one sits you more upright." Too many options delay the decision.

4. Size and test ride

Put the customer on the bike. A bike that fits and has been ridden is far more likely to be bought, and far less likely to come back as a complaint.

5. Sell the whole ride

A bike without a helmet, lights, pump and bottle cage is not ready to ride. Offer these with the bike, not after the bill is made. Offer the ESP service plan at delivery.

6. Always agree the next step

If they are not buying today, agree a specific next step: a call on Thursday, a test ride on Saturday, a quote on WhatsApp in ten minutes. Take the phone number and put it in the CRM before they leave the store.

7. Follow up within a day

Contact the customer within 24 hours with something useful: the quote, the size confirmation, the stock answer. Most of our lost inquiries went quiet. The store that follows up gets the sale.

8. Deliver properly

- Set saddle height and check the fit.
- Explain gears, brakes and tyre pressure.
- Explain the free tune-up within 30 days and the free Prime service within 6 months.
- For Trek, register the bike in the customer's name for the lifetime frame warranty.
- Ask for a Google review.

Never do these

- Never guess a spec, a price or a delivery date. Check, then answer.
- Never run down another shop or brand.
- Never let a customer leave without a next step.

Remember these

- Ask about the rider before showing a bike.
- Show three options, each with a reason in the customer's words.
- No customer leaves without an agreed next step and a CRM entry.
- Follow up within 24 hours with something useful.
